Introduction

The Innovation Panel is...

Multistage stratified cluster sampling was used...

Central to this research report are the following research questions: '...'.

First we look at the sampling design and design weights, next population estimates are computed, and finally the effect of non-response on the estimates is investigated, as well as possible sources of non-response error.

Sampling Design

"Include descriptions of your frame and target and population, intended sample size, and method of sample selection. Discuss potential non-sampling, sampling, and non-response errors" (Assignment 6, fox, 2018).

1. The Innovation panel would interview multiple people from every household, but in the case households are very large, a Kish Grid is used. Can you explain why the Kish Grid is a popular method to do within-household selection of respondents?

The Kish Grid method is used to select respondents in a household at random. This method considered to lead to a random sample of household members, and avoids selection bias in the survey.

It is a popular method because when carried out correctly, it leads to (almost) equal probability sampling, something other selection methods do not obtain. Moreover, the only information you need in order to select respondents is a list containing the names of the persons in the household you want to sample.

Design Weights

[13] "northern ireland"

2. Despite the complex data structure, the design weights as included in the variable "a_psnenip_xd" have a very low variance. Can you explain why this is the case? As the following table shows, the variance in the design weight variable is . . .

Var. <- var(society$a_psnenip_xd) #compute variance in the design weight variable Descr. <- cbind(t(summary(society$a_psnenip_xd)), Var.) #combine with other descriptive statistics round(Descr., 2) #print with only two decimals
Min. 1st Qu. Median Mean 3rd Qu. Max. Var.</pre>

The low variance is due to rescaling of the weights, as explained in the IP User Guide (p. 56): "Each set of weights has been scaled by a constant factor to produce a mean of one amongst cases eligible to receive the weight". Rescaling, truncating, or smoothing of weights are techniques to inhibit the effect of a single observation on population estimates (Lohr, year).

Lower MSE (Lohr, p. 286), and application from IP User Guide.

1 1.01

3. Apart from the design weight, an enumerated design weight "a_psnenip_xw" is also included. Please show using syntax in R how you can calculate this weight.

The weight a_psnenip_xw was calculated using the design weights (a_psnenip_xd), sex, age and government region. It is known that age was split up in seven groups and the government regions were split up in four, but which ones these were is unknown. To find out, we will start with a linear regression.

It is not completely clear which values should be grouped together, despite how nicely the weights are grouped. As can be seen on the map below, where the regions are numbered from the lowest to the highest weight, the grouping is rather strange.

The baseline and the other two areas with a weight close to zero are Scotland, London and the West Midlands. Scotland and London are likely candidates to be categories of their own, as Scotland has a strong regional identity and London is the capital of the country. From a data-driven perspective, combining the West Midlands with any region other than London or Scotland does not make sense, as the weight difference between those region and all other regions is relatively big. From a theory-driven perspective, we cannot think of any good reason to combine the West Midlands with London or Scotland: it is not filled with cities nor is it close enough to Scotland to assume a similar population.

When assuming that the regions with a near-identical weight are in the same group and Scotland and London are two separate categories, only a few possible groupings remain:

- 1. South East, South West, and North East England are the third category, with Wales and the rest of England being the last category.
- This makes some sense theoretically: the three are the very north and south of England, with the remainder being in the middle. Weight-wise however, combining the West Midlands with the areas with far lower weights does not make sense.

- 2. The same as above, but with the West Midlands grouped with London.
- This is more logical weight-wise than the first option, but from a theoretical perspective it is strange to combine the city with a rural area.
- 3. The North West, West Midlands and East of England are the third category, with Wales and the rest of England being the last category.
- Weight-wise it is just as logical or illogical as the first option, but from a theoretical standpoint taking three areas in the middle seems to have less of a basis than taking the outer areas like is done in the first option.
- 4. The West Midlands alone being the third category, with the rest of England being the fourth.
- This fits weight-wise, but why the West Midlands should be taken seperately is a mystery. It is however less absurd than combining it with London: the West Midlands may have unique features that we do not know about, but we do know that it is not a capital like London.

In conclusion, the fourth option seems the most likely, as the grouping is logical from a data-driven perspective and while it does not quite make sense theoretically, there is no evidence that it is incorrect. The best alternative is the first option, as it makes the most sense from a theoretical perspective.

The next step is to decide the age groups

Gather grouped region in one dummy variable
This is done by creating a dummy variable that is true when London, Scotland and the # Western Midlands are not.
society 3$grouped gor <- with(society 3, L!=T & S!=T & WM!=T)
Change age into factor

It's ordinal, so there is no need to create dummy variables
Rerun linear regression coeff2 <- with(society_3, lm(a_psnenip_xw ~ a_psnenip_xd + a_sex + WM + L</pre> + grouped_gor + age_fac))
Get coefficients
coeff2 <- coeff2$coefficients</pre> coeff2.age <- coeff2[7:102]</pre>
Change names of coefficients into numbers
test <- unlist(strsplit(names(coeff2.age), "age_fac"))</pre> names(coeff2.age) <- as.numeric(test[test!=""])</pre> # Plot coefficients
plot(names(coeff2.age), coeff2.age) for (i in seq(0,110,10)){ abline(v=i)

The big differences are between 20 and 21, 40 and 41, 70 and 71, 80 and 81. First, let's combine the #levels(society_3$age_fac) <- c(rep("group1", 20), rep("group2", 20), levels(society_3$age_fac)[41:97])

coeff3 <- with(society_3, lm(a_psnenip_xw \sim a_psnenip_xd + a_sex + WM + L + grouped_gor + age_fac))

Get coefficients
#coeff3 <- coeff3$coefficients
#coeff3.age <- coeff3[7:64]
#plot(coeff3.age)

There are some clear groupinds in the weights. Inspec

- 5. Please investigate the relationship between age and household composition for the population of Great Britain.
- a. Investigate which age variable you should use For householdcomposition, with/without children is key. Therefore, young children's ages do not matter as much, but 15-20 is expected to have more variance and should thus be over-sampled.
- b. Construct a new variable "household_composition" from the following four variables: "a_livesp_dv, a cohab dv, a single dv, a mastat dv". Household composition:

First, create variable household size:

Household size: count for each household, how many persons there are in.
a_hidp - Household identifier
count <- as.matrix(table(society$a_hidp)) # number of occurrences of each a_hidp (indicator of size of h</pre> summary(count)

create variable to assign household size to each individual person society$household_size <- NA</pre> for (i in rownames(count)) { # for each household... society$household_size[society$a_hidp == i] <- count[i,] # maybe this can be written into nicer R cod
household_type
number of children (according to eurostat properties..)

Couple (with/without children) Single adult (with/without children) Other type of household (with/without children)

Household information data a_marstat - Legal marital status a_livesp - Living with spouse a_livewith - Living as part of a couple in household a_adresp15 - Adult responsible for child age < 15 a_adresp17 - Adult responsible for child age < 17 a_livesp_dv - Living with spouse a_cohab_dv - Living with cohabitee a_single_dv - Single in household a_mastat_dv - De facto marital status a_depchl_dv - Whether person is a dependent child a_rach16_dv - Whether responsible for a child under 16 a_respm16_dv - Whether natural/adoptive/step mother of child under 16 a_respf16 dv - Whether natural/adoptive/step father of child under 16 a_nchild_dv - Number of own children in household a_ndepchl_dv - Number of own dependent children in household

c. Which weight should you use here? For this analysis, we want to use a weight per person (PSN), as it is impossible to calculate age per household. We also want to use the enumeration grid weights (EN), as both age and household composition have no missing values. We want the weights of the first wave (IP), as that is the one we are investigating. Finally, we want to use the stratified weights (XW) rather than the design weights, as we are investigating population values and not sample values. Thus, we want to use the weight a_psnenip_xw, as this is the only weight that covers the correct data in the correct way.

There are forty levels, but by looking at the site (https://www.understandingsociety.ac.uk/documentation/innovation-panel/dataset-documentation/wave/1/datafile/a_indall_ip/variable/a_ivfio), we find only 10 appear in the first wave. Of those, only full interview and youth interview indicate interviews that personally did an interview. Language difficulties is a rather neutral description, but looking at the variable i_proxy:

society$a_iproxy[society$a_ivfio=="Language difficulties"]
```

[1] no interview and no proxy interview - unproductive
[2] no interview and no proxy interview - unproductive
[3] no interview and no proxy interview - unproductive
[4] no interview and no proxy interview - unproductive
[5] no interview and no proxy interview - unproductive
[6] no interview and no proxy interview - unproductive
7 Levels: missing inapplicable proxy respondent refuse ... no interview and no proxy interview - unproductive

Shows that language difficulty also indicates missing data. Thus, only two of the levels indicate a personal interview and thus should be included for this analysis.

I_personal <- with(Nonmiss, subset(Design, a_ivfio=="Full interview" | a_ivfio=="Youth Interview")) svymean(~employ_dv, I_personal)

mean SE
employ_dv 0.47081 0.0113
confint(svymean(~employ_dv, I_personal))

2.5 % 97.5 %
employ_dv 0.4487549 0.4928699</pre>

After post-stratification (as we also included post-stratification in the previous analysis), 46% of the people who did a personal interview is employed, with a confidence interval of 44.9%-49.3%. For the previous question, where all but two people were included, the estimated proportion of the population that is employed was 43,3%, with a 95% confidence interval of 41.4%-45.2%. As neither mean is contained in the 95% confidence interval of the other, it can be concluded that there is a difference between respondents and non-respondents in employment, with respondents being more likely to be employed than non-respondents.

8. Using only variables from this dataset, can you find variables which could potentially be useful for constructing nonresponse weights? Why these variables? Nonresponse can seriously threat the quality of estimates if the nonresponders differ from the responders in the study. We can adjust for this by the use of auxiliary variables that hold information about the entire sample. We can compare the distribution of the auxiliary variables of the population with its response distribution, and assess whether the response is representative for the whole population.

If the distributions differ, we must conclude that nonresponse has lead to a nonrepresentative sample. We can adjust for this by constructing nonresponse weights from the auxiliary variables. Then the weighted sample is representative with respect to the auxiliary variables used.

/Schouten (2007) says: We propose a selection strategy of weighting variables that minimises the width of the bias interval. The strategy is a forward inclusion-backward elimination algorithm of auxiliary variables similar to algorithms applied in regression analysis. Variables are included or eliminated based on jackknife estimates of the mean and standard deviation of the change in interval width. /The IP User Guide states "that all models used to predict response propensities as described in the Technical Details are fitted using stepwise backward logistic regression with p=0.05." ???Note that all models used to predict response propensities as described in the Technical Details are fitted using stepwise backward logistic regression with p=0.05. Each set of weights has been scaled by a constant factor to produce a mean of one amongst cases eligible to receive the weight. In consequence, weights which are defined as equal (e.g. D_HHDENIP_XW AND D_PSNENIP_XW for the refreshment sample) will not necessarily have the same numeric value, but will retain the same between-person/household relative value??? (IP User Guide, p. 56).

Steps we want to undertake: 1. Identify nonresponse 2. Come up with strategy to identify useful auxiliary variables 3. Select auxiliary variables

?need to compare every auxiliary variable individually?

First, we need to divide the population in the respondents and nonrespondents There are two stages of nonresponse here: * individual nonresponse: whether a personal interview was conducted yes or no * household nonresponse: defined as completian of at least the household grid

society$person_response <- society$a_ivfio == "Youth Interview" | society$a_ivfio == "Full interview" | 1-mean(society$person_response) # proportion of individual nonresponse

```
[1] 0.2622222

levels (society$a_hhresp_dv) # looks like all households at least filled in the grid.

[1] "All present adults interviewed"
[2] "All present adults interview or proxy"
[3] "At least one adult interview"

[4] "No adult interviews"

Individual nonresponse is 26.2% It looks like household nonresponse cannot be identified in this dataset. The levels of variable A_hhresp_dv suggests that all households at least completed the household grid (maybe this is the case for wave 1?). According to user guide, this respons should be 1about 59%. CHECK. For now, we only take into account individual nonresponse. If available it could also be interesting to use household nonresponse as a potentially useful auxiliary variable.

/Person response: The enumerated person weight (A_PSNENIP_XW) is defined for all persons in households that participated in IP1. The weight equals the IP1 household weight, post-stratified by age, sex, and grouped Government Office Region. The post-stratification targets are taken from Office for National Statistics 2008 mid-year population statistics. /

Second, we want to come up with a strategy in how to select the most appropriate auxiliary variables to construct nonresponse weights. There are several ways to do this: - algorithm - statistical (stepwise) logistic regression: which auxiliary variables are best in predicting individual nonresponse. - user guide indicates sex and gender as auxiliary variables. Women and older people are more prone to respond.

Third, we apply selection strategy:

auxiliaries <- subset(society, select = c("a_hidp")) #matrix of all possible auxiliary variables

? don't include weights in svy_design as well when doing logistic regression because they're already corrected for nonresponse..? or aren't they?
